Citizen Science

Citizen science refers to the community participating in organised research efforts to survey the biodiversity around us. As a citizen scientist, you aid in the collection of large amounts of data, and learn more about our biodiversity at the same time. The data you collect can inform decision makers and help in the formulation of conservation strategies.

There is a variety of citizen science initiatives available to the public and school groups. The programmes target specific groups of animals like birds, butterflies and dragonflies. Find out more about the programmes from the National Biodiversity Centre.

Community in Bloom

Community in Bloom is a nationwide gardening movement that aims to foster a community spirit and bring together residents, both young and old, to make Singapore our garden. Put your green fingers to good use as you maintain a community garden, which includes sowing of seeds, pruning, weeding, fertilising the soil, composting, and identifying and labelling the plants.

Habitat Enhancement

Play an active role in supporting and promoting Singapore's natural heritage by maintaining and enhancing habitats for our flora and fauna.

Mangrove Cleanup

- Pasir Ris Park

Plant Records

- Singapore Botanic Gardens

To work on plant records, you should be familiar with data entry. You will help build up the Gardens' plant information database during office hours on weekdays, and have the opportunity to conduct field surveys and gain knowledge of plant records management in a botanical institution.

Work closely with our horticulturists and support them in managing the landscapes in parks and gardens. Also, learn about different plants and their characteristics.

Herbarium Cataloguing

- Singapore Botanic Gardens

You can contribute at the Herbarium by helping our research team preserve and record specimens from not just the Singapore Botanic Gardens but all over the world. This will involve repairing and mounting dried specimens currently stored in our Herbarium.
